Modernism is often associated with the International Style. However, some of the best examples are those that re-interpret existing architectural traditions through the language of contemporary building materials and technologies. Mexican architecture is exemplary in this regard. Throughout the 20th century, architects found ample inspiration in the country's architecturally fertile history. Indeed, Mexico's countless pre-Hispanic and colonial heritages combine to form the largest concentration of UNESCO World Heritage Sites in the Americas. In the decades following the Mexican Revolution of 1917, federal funding for housing, education and healthcare programs fueled a creative culture of design and construction.

Today, the country continues to innovate, with socio-political agendas pushing the envelope in volume, materiality and environmental footprint. While Luis Barragán's name continues to loom large on the scene, Frida Escobedo and Tatiana Bilbao are also making ways by changing the urban landscape into a contemporary and socially responsible space. Mexico's architectural palimpsest has equally intrigued contemporary designers to revive the vernacular building traditions of its indigenous ancestors.

With so many architecture firms to choose from, it's challenging for clients to identify the industry leaders that will be an ideal fit for their project needs. Fortunately, Architizer is able to provide guidance on the top design firms in Mexico based on more than a decade of data and industry knowledge.

How are these architecture firms ranked?

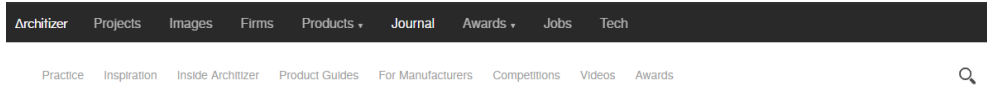

The following ranking has been created according to key statistics that demonstrate each firm's level of architectural excellence. The following metrics have been accumulated to establish each architecture firm's ranking, in order of priority:

- The number of A+ Awards won (2013 to 2026)
- The number of A+ Awards finalists (2013 to 2026)
- The number of projects selected as "Project of the Day" (2009 to 2026)
- The number of projects selected as "Featured Project" (2009 to 2026)
- The number of projects uploaded to Architizer (2009 to 2026)

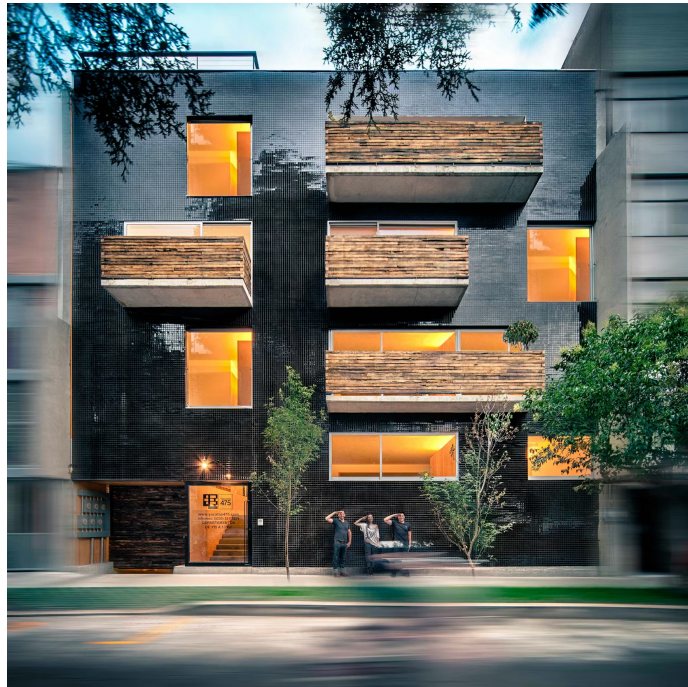

Each of these metrics is explained in more detail at the foot of this article. This ranking list will be updated annually, taking into account new achievements of Mexico architecture firms throughout the year.
